

Casting a Vision to Obtain Stewardship Results

Do your parishioners know what their offerings support?

This year, don't just ask your parishioners to give more. Invite them to see what their parish can accomplish through their gifts!

For where your treasure is, there also will your heart be. What if everyone followed this verse from Matthew 6:21? If we did, there probably wouldn't be many parishes worried about how to fund their ministries. In fact, there wouldn't even be a need for stewardship professionals to encourage parishioners to pray, serve, or give. And if there was, there would be more than enough in the budget to do so.

While some parishioners give out of their God-given identity and other stewardship principles you work so hard to convey, others who have yet to become active stewards may give out of charitable motivations.

Parishes are also entrusted to properly steward their parishioner's gifts. It's important that you take the steps necessary to help people feel connected to the parish by communicating your vision. You should employ strategies that not only build trust through accountability and transparency, but engage and excite people to give back a portion of the abundant blessings God has blessed them with.
